There is much latitude left to principals and teachers in supplying the lunches. The teachers in supplying the lunches. The teachers yesterday as a rule asked their classes early in the morning how many wanted lunch. All who did came forward and put down one, two or three cents. Each item of the lunch was one cent. Nearly all the children paid for the whole menu.

An hour or two later the teachers distributed tickets to those children, who had paid and also to a few in each school who they knew needed the lunch and couldn't pay for it. It is these youngsters, the ones who are chronically under nourished, that advocates of the school lunches say they want to reach.
